

An abstract painting featuring a complex, swirling composition of vibrant colors. The palette includes deep blues, bright yellows, lush greens, and fiery reds, all set against a dark, almost black background. The brushstrokes are dynamic and expressive, creating a sense of movement and depth. In the center of the composition, there is a stylized, orange monogram that resembles the letter 'R'.

The story so far

Vibrant and full of motion - Timaru painter Roselyn Cloake has drawn on the natural environment and her Dutch-New Zealand ancestry.

Some Kiwi, some Dutch, some determination, a flair for art and a love of finesse, all merge to make Roselyn the smart painter that audiences are starting to comment on, as she maps out her path to artistic independence.

When in Europe, she was overwhelmed by the paintings and the landscape she saw there. While Holland was her mother's homeland, it was a foreign place for Roselyn, which challenged her to learn who she was and what she wanted to do. On her return she began working with her father as a graphic and website designer, whilst developing her painting skills and ideas.

Her series of paintings have been inspired by the cubist movement and in particular Juan Gris, who showed a 3D world as if looking through the facets of a crystal glass. This approach offered Roselyn the freedom to express herself and put her own interpretation on realistic situations, icons and objects which have personal meaning.

The series unites her parent's different cultural backgrounds to show where she has come from. Her mother is symbolised in windmills and the iconic flat Dutch landscape. Her father is iconised by the sunrise, trees and rolling hills round Timaru, which appear on his father's "Cloake's Honey" tin. Part of her interpretation is the use of cartooning techniques to portray movement and time. By incorporating this fourth dimension, she has developed her own unique painting style.
